

URGENT ACTION

ACTIVISTS DEPORTED FROM SAUDI ARABIA DETAINED

Activists Elgassim Mohamed Seed Ahmed, Elwaleed Imam Hassan Taha and Alaa Aldin al-Difana were deported from Saudi Arabia to Sudan on 11 July. The Sudanese National Intelligence Service (NISS) arrested them upon arrival in Sudan. The three are currently being held at the NISS headquarters in Khartoum North. Amnesty considers them to be prisoners of conscience held solely for exercising their right to freedom of expression.

Elgassim Mohamed Seed Ahmed and Elwaleed Imam Hassan Taha, Sudanese nationals, were arrested on 21 December 2016 in Saudi Arabia and detained without charge. During their detention, the two told their families that they were interrogated around eight times by security officers from the Saudi Arabia General Directorate of Investigations (also known as al-Mabahith). The interrogation centered around their social media activism following their support of the civil disobedience protest in Sudan in November and December 2016 on Facebook. Saudi Arabian security officers told them that they were being detained and interrogated at the behest of the Sudanese authorities and that they might be deported to Sudan. The two activists were held incommunicado at al-Ha'ir prison in the Saudi Arabian capital, Riyadh until 13 February when their families were allowed to visit them for the first time. However, they remained in solitary confinement at the prison until 6 March when they were finally moved into a cell together.

Alaa Aldin Daffalla al-Difana, 44, a Sudanese national, journalist and long-standing opposition activist, was arrested and detained at around 9am on 26 December 2016 by four security officers from the Ministry of Interior while at his apartment in Mecca, western Saudi Arabia. They searched his home and car and confiscated his phone and documents without an arrest or search warrant. Alaa Aldin al-Difana, who also works at a driving school, has on several occasions called for social and political change in Sudan. Through his Facebook page, Alaa Aldin al-Difana showed his support for the November and December 2016 civil disobedience in Sudan.

Elgassim Mohamed Seed Ahmed, Elwaleed Imam Hassan Taha and Alaa Aldin al-Difana were deported from Saudi Arabia to Sudan on 11 July. They were arrested by the NISS upon arrival in Sudan and are being held at the NISS headquarters in Khartoum North.

ADDITIONAL INFORMATION

On 3 November 2016, the Government of Sudan imposed new economic austerity measures to reduce the trade deficit and to stop the deteriorating exchange rate of the Sudanese Pound. The new measures significantly increased fuel, transport, food, electricity and medicine prices. In protest against the government's new economic policy, political activists called for a three-day nationwide strike from 27 to 29 November 2016. The strike was widely supported. A call was then made for a second civil disobedience action on 19 December 2016, which was supported by activists both inside and outside Sudan. In a pre-emptive move in early November 2016, the Sudanese government began arresting dozens of political activists and continually suppressed press freedom; seven newspapers all had their issues confiscated on 23 different occasions in November and December 2016.

Elgassim Mohamed Seed Ahmed had lived in Saudi Arabia since 1998 and Elwaleed Imam Hassan Taha since 2013. Both men worked in a supply company in Riyadh. They were arrested outside their workplace at about 5pm on 21 December 2016 by security officers dressed in civilian clothing. They were driven to their respective homes, which the officers then searched. The officers told Elgassim Mohamed Seed Ahmed's family that they were from the Ministry of Interior's Security Division and that he would be released by midnight. No arrest or search warrant was shown to the families for either men. The two men were held incommunicado from the time of their arrest until 13 February, when their families were allowed to visit. According to their families, Elgassim Mohamed Seed Ahmed and Elwaleed Imam Hassan Taha were told by security officials during their interrogation that they would face imprisonment or deportation.

Alaa Aldin al-Difana is a member of the National Umma Party (Hizb al-Umma al-Qawmi), an opposition political party in Sudan. On his Facebook page, he wrote about medical negligence in Sudan's hospitals and corruption within Sudan's government ministries. He is also a well-known journalist and has written for various Sudanese websites. According to his family, he was previously arrested in 2003, 2007, 2011 and 2012 for his activism in Sudan. He left Sudan for Saudi Arabia in 2012.

The NISS maintains broad powers of arrest and detention under the National Security Act 2010 (NSA), which allows suspects to be detained for up to four-and-a-half months without judicial review. NISS officials often use these powers to arbitrarily arrest and detain individuals, and many have been subjected to torture or other forms of ill-treatment. Under the same Act, NISS agents are provided with protection from prosecution for any act committed in the course of their work, which has resulted in a pervasive culture of impunity. The constitutional amendment to Article 151 (NSA) passed on 5 January 2015 expanding the mandate of the NISS and exacerbating the situation. The amendment transformed the NISS from an intelligence agency focused on information gathering, analysis and advice, to a fully-fledged security agency with a broad mandate to exercise a mix of functions usually carried out by the armed forces or law enforcement agencies. It gave the NISS unlimited discretion to decide what constitutes a political, economic or social threat and how to respond to such threats. Neither the NSA nor the revised Article 151 explicitly or implicitly require the NISS to abide by relevant international, regional and domestic law in the operation of its duties.
