

URGENT ACTION

BURUNDIAN PRISONER OF CONSCIENCE ON TRIAL

Germain Rukuki remains in prison after appearing before court for the second time on 3 April 2018 for several charges relating to his human rights work. Germain was arrested in July 2017 in the capital Bujumbura. He is the president of a community organization called Njabutsa Tujane and an employee of the Burundian Catholic Lawyers Association.

Germain Rukuki, who is also a former employee of Action by Christians for the Abolition of Torture (ACAT) – Burundi, appeared in court for the second time on 3 April 2018. During the hearing, the Prosecutor argued that Germain was part of the “insurrection movement of 2015” where widespread protests were organized against President Pierre Nkurunziza’s decision to seek a third term in office. At the same hearing, Germain’s lawyers asked the court to disregard the statements he made when he was interrogated by the National Intelligence Service (SNR) without a lawyer present. The court promised to review the lawyer’s request when it sits to hear the merits of the case. The date for the next hearing is yet to be set.

Germain was arrested on 13 July 2017 in Bujumbura where he was initially detained and interrogated by the SNR without a lawyer present. He was later transferred to prison in Ngozi, northern Burundi, on 26 July 2017. On 1 August 2017, he was charged with “threatening state security” and “rebellion” for working with ACAT-Burundi. ACAT-Burundi along with several other independent human rights organizations were shut down by the Minister of Interior in October 2016, who accused them of “tarnishing the image of the country” and “sowing hatred and division among the Burundian population.” Its closure came after it published a report on the anti-third term protests. The Public Prosecutor presented as evidence an email exchange between Germain and ACAT staff from a time when ACAT-Burundi was still legally registered in Burundi. When his trial began on 13 February 2018, Germain was additionally charged with “assassination”, “destruction of public and private buildings” and “participation in an insurrectionist movement”.

Amnesty International considers Germain Rukuki to be a prisoner of conscience. He is being prosecuted solely for the peaceful exercise of his human rights work.
